St. Andrews Castle, on the coast of Fife, was originally built by Bishop Roger in 1200, but was afterwards destroyed for fear of its capture by the English. It was again erected by Bishop Traill nearly two centuries later. Cardinal Beaton was murdered here in 1546 by the followers of George Wishart, the martyr. The murderers, with the assistance of Knox, held the castle for over 12 months before yielding to the attacks of the besieging French and Scottish troops.

Bothwell Castle. This fine old massive ruin overlooks a bend of the Clyde about 8 miles from Glasgow. It is situated amid charming sylvan scenery in which a number of beech trees are a special feature. Bothwell Castle was once occupied by Wallace, afterwards it was given to the Earl of Pembroke by Edward I. On the expulsion of the English it became again the property of its original owners, the Murray family.
